

PODCAST | POLITICS

Settler Colonial Spillover in the West Bank with Fathi Nimer

By: Al-Shabaka: The Palestinian Policy Network, Fathi Nimer · February, 2024

Fathi Nimer 0:00

The plans for the West Bank can't be seen in separation from the plans of the Gaza Strip. Even from the beginning of the war, people were talking about pushing the Palestinians of Gaza out into Sinai and re establishing settlements again. This is not different at all from what's happening in the West Bank and what they are planning for the West Bank or what they would like to happen in the West Bank, expanding more settlements and kicking out more Palestinians. This is all part of the same struggle. It's part of the same colonization effort.

Yara Hawari 0:31

From Ashabaka, the Palestinian Policy Network. I am Yara Hawari, and this is Rethinking Palestine.

Since the assault on Gaza, which began in October 2023, tens of thousands of Palestinians have been killed, injured, or are missing, likely buried under the rubble of their own homes or shelters. Nearly two million Palestinians in Gaza have been displaced, with cold, thirst, and hunger ravaging the entire population.

While the world deliberates on the technicalities of genocide, Israeli colonization of the West Bank and disruption to Palestinian life has only accelerated. Joining me in this episode is Fathi Nimer, Al Shabaka's very own Palestine Policy Fellow.

Fathi, thank you for joining me on Rethinking Palestine.

Fathi Nimer 1:22

Thank you for having me, Yara.

Yara HAwari 1:23

So, Fathi, perhaps you can tell us a little bit about what the Israeli regime is doing on the ground in the West Bank at the moment.

Fathi Nimer 1:30

The Israeli regime has been really going on an absolutely barbaric rampage in the West Bank from the side of military raids and arrests, we're talking about almost 400 Palestinians who have been killed in the West Bank since the 7th of October and thousands have been injured. They seem to be taking out their frustrations really on Palestinians for the events in Gaza and shooting anyone for any reason. I mean, in the early stages of the war, we heard terrifying stories about the torture of Palestinians, humiliation, and even urinating on them.

Of course, before October 7, there were minimal or no consequences to such behavior, but now it seems normalized as a way of revenge against Palestinians. The settlers have also been going on a rampage. They seem to be now emboldened to go out and do whatever they want. They have been armed by the government, thousands of assault rifles were distributed to them.

So they now feel that they have the backing of everybody to just go out and do whatever they want. They've been burning down orchards and threatening Palestinians. The number of Palestinians arrested has skyrocketed. We're talking about almost 6,000. Today in the last four months, for example, Palestinian laborers inside the Israeli labor market have been banned from entry because all of their permits have been revoked.

There have been some sanctions on the Palestinian Authority by way of withholding the tax returns, which is supposedly a right of the Palestinian Authority to take from Israel. And this has also closed down transportation. There are difficulties exporting, importing, and people just getting to work or people just trying to access universities, for example, has been very difficult to move between areas.

So this is in general, some of the biggest actions taken by the Israeli occupation since October 7th in the West Bank.

And of course that difficulty in movement is because of the extra roadblocks and checkpoints that the Israeli army has set up across the West Bank. I read somewhere that there are now more checkpoints than there were during the second intifada.

Close down of the West Bank has been really extreme. Now, of course, before October, we had villages, for example, in the Southeast Nablus area who had their main entrances forced shut so that the Palestinian traffic is segregated from settler traffic. But today, even routes that are usually open have been completely sealed and new checkpoints have been introduced in areas that had never existed before.

Like you said, even before the second Intifada, so a routine, like 30-minute drive could take up to an hour and an hour and a half now, depending on where you're going. And this has been very noticeable in the villages around Ramallah as well.

Yara Hawari 4:04

And now Fathi you mentioned the withholding of the Palestinian tax revenue by the Israeli regime.

It's worth mentioning for our listeners that under the Paris Protocol which was a sort of economic annex of the Oslo Accords in 1994, the protocol, stipulated that the Israeli regime would collect the tax revenues on behalf of the PA until it achieved statehood. And the Israeli regime has systematically used that as leverage to collectively punish the PA, to collectively punish Palestinians.

And so again, we see that being used in the West Bank, but also for public servants in Gaza. So many Palestinians who work in the public sector are actually not getting their, their full salaries. And I think it was estimated that the Israeli regime is withholding around 188 million a month, which accounts for about 64 percent of the PA authority's total revenue.

Fathi Nimer 5:05

I think things like this, such as the economic angle or the bureaucratic angle of such, it usually gets left behind, understandably, because of the genocide going on in Gaza and of the deaths and the killings going on in the West Bank. But this is like the systemic effects of the occupation, how it operates.

It's also very violent and very colonial. So the design of the economy of the West Bank from day one has been designed in a way that could be held hostage by Israel, like at the drop of a hat. And this is what they really succeeded with. Now we have about 170,000 laborers that have been cut up from their income.

We have PA workers, around 140 thousand between civilian and security sectors, who depend on these tax returns to be able to be paid their salaries. We're talking about hundreds of thousands of people having their income either cut or disrupted. Difficulties exporting or importing mean that companies simply can't function as normal, and even if they could, the indirect damage is that people simply have less money to buy anything. So nobody has really remained unaffected by the economic aspects and these measures taken by Israel. And this is not the first time, of course, that this happened. Whenever something that Israel is unhappy about happens, they withhold the tax returns.

We saw this during the Second Intifada, they operated that quite frequently, and it would not be uncommon for people to go out months without any kind of income.

Yara Hawari 6:31

So Fathi we're seeing a severe economic impact. We're seeing increased military raids, mass incarceration. We're also seeing extrajudicial assassinations.

Why is all of this going under the radar? Why is this not being reported on by the mainstream media?

Fathi Nimer 6:51

It's understandable in a way, the genocide currently being carried out against Gaza is on such a monstrous scale with so many stories of cruelty, mass murder, and really the unfiltered imagery that's coming out of it, like this is one of the most documented genocides out there when it comes to social media, and it's impossible not for that to take precedence over what's going on here in the West Bank.

So this is part of the reason why Israelis, settlers, armies and all the components of their society, thought it would be a golden opportunity to go out and just do whatever they want. Settlers in particular have really been reaping this now that they're much more emboldened with their more open support anyway by the state. They've been going out and expelling Palestinians from their communities. We're talking about entire Bedouin communities that no longer exist, especially in the Hebron area.

They go, they burn their crops, they kill their livestock, and they tell them if they don't leave, their entire family is going to be killed tomorrow. And this has been the case. We have over a thousand people that have been expelled from over 13 communities in the Southern West Bank and threats of a second Nakba or Great Nakba.

This has become routine from the settlers, you know, from a society that usually denies the Nakba, but now it's something to be called for and cherished and galvanized for. So I really think that the genocide happening in Gaza is being used as a cover by these settlers and the army to do whatever they want in the West Bank with much less scrutiny than usual.

Usually there isn't that much scrutiny to begin with, but now they can get away with, they think they get away with really anything they want to do. So none of these plans are really new, but this is the timing that they chose because they think that people are less likely to notice.

Yara Hawari 8:44

Of course, the devastation in Gaza is ongoing and so, so horrific. It makes sense that reporting on that would take precedence. But I do think, especially in the mainstream Western media, that there is a more insidious aspect to this. I think it's about isolating Gaza from the rest of Palestine. It's about framing this as a war between Hamas and Israel rather than an acceleration in the ethnic cleansing of Palestine.

That's why there is limited reporting on what's happening in the West Bank because it's kind of a compartmentalization or a dividing of Palestine to separate Gaza and sort of make it seem like an isolated issue rather than really the core of the, the Palestinian struggle.

Fathi Nimer 9:31

I agree. I think the compartmentalization of Palestine and its different regions is a very serious issue. And it is employed in such a manner. The plans for the West Bank can't be seen in separation from the plans of the Gaza Strip. Even from the beginning of the war, people were talking about pushing the people, the Palestinians of Gaza out into Sinai and making, and reestablishing settlements again.

This is not very different at all from what's happening in the West Bank and what they are planning for the West Bank or what they would like to happen in the West Bank, expanding more settlements, kicking out more Palestinians. This is all part of the same, you know, struggle. It's part of the same colonization efforts.

We can't look at it separately from what's going on even in Jerusalem or even within 1948 territories. It's all connected. And I think one of the biggest successes really of the West Bank. the occupation of 1967 is that it's really tried to reinforce these kind of segmentation of Palestinian society and to kind of make this a fact of life and a natural part rather than it being something imposed on us very recently.

Yara Hawari 10:40

If you're enjoying this podcast, please visit our website al-shabaka.org where you will find more Palestinian policy analysis and where you can join our mailing list and donate to support our work.

So Fathi, what has been the global policy reaction to the things that are unfolding in the West Bank?

Fathi Nimer 11:00

We know when it comes to Gaza, for example, we haven't seen anything concrete. We have the usual calls to respect human rights. If something is like really bad, they're like we're concerned about the human rights situation but when it comes to the West Bank it feels like they're a little bit more brave to talk about the situation, relatively speaking it's not great. They feel like they can talk about the situation a bit more because it can't be seen as support for Hamas but rather for the Palestinian Authority which has been doing its best to remain in the good graces of its benefactors.

Like when it comes to the West Bank, it's easy to say, "oh, these are just radical fringe settlers, treat them as isolated incidents, and you know absolutely ignore how they cannot exist without government support and resources." And of course, do not criticize the official "military action" carried out by the occupation forces. So I think very little has been done.

But recently, we heard about this Biden step to sanction settlers. So he made it crystal clear, he refuses to put any red lines on Israel and Gaza. So to try and appease, in my view, some of his Muslim or Arab base in the US during the election season, I think he tried to throw people a bone. And he said, he's going to sanction extremist settlers who attack Palestinians.

And of course, all of that ended up being somehow four people. I don't really think that this is a very meaningful step, the practicalities of it are completely unclear. Are they going to use Israeli police data? Because that will never happen. They aren't going to cooperate. Are they going to use Palestinian testimonies? I don't think that they're going to rely on that either.

It just seems like a very weak step trying to appear like they're doing something because they're absolutely not doing anything in Gaza other than of course supporting the genocide. If he wanted to make any real statement, he would have sanctioned all settlers as a whole. That would have been more impactful.

But again, I don't think that's the actual goal actually pressuring Israel I think it's just to try to salvage some of his image after his open support for the Gaza genocide. Of course, the Israelis are making a big deal out of it, they're making it seem much more significant than it actually is. But this is you know, generally how Israel acts even someone like Obama who signed one of the biggest military support packages in history was called anti-Israel because one time he criticized Israel without actually, you know, doing any follow up or any action for it. But this is how it usually goes.

Yara Hawari 13:38

So, Fathi, let's switch gears a bit and focus on the Palestinian Authority and its response to the ongoing genocide in Gaza.

Fathi Nimer 13:47

Well, the Palestinian Authority, it's basically been acting almost like a neutral third country. It claims that it's doing diplomatic work behind the scenes, but I really take that claim with a grain of salt. And even so, if that's the entirety of its reaction, it's completely inadequate in the current moment.

I wish it were only relegated to that. I mean, it's actually killed four Palestinians for protesting against it during the genocide. People were out in the street and what started as a support for Gaza protest. And then it became an anti-PA protest as it usually does because they were basically not doing anything.

It was repressed quite harshly, as is the habit of the PA and multiple of these protests around four Palestinians have been killed. It doesn't just stop there. There are reports that the PA has actually instructed its schools, the official government schools to not even mention anything about Gaza since October or anything having to do with resistance.

They're absolutely terrified of being in any way seen to be in collusion or in support of Hamas or the Palestinians in Gaza in anything that's going on. And I think they're really in a tough position because their project is kind of falling apart. Palestinian youth, for example, overwhelmingly see the PA as this corrupt subcontractor for the occupation.

They've lived their entire lives under this paradigm of two states and Oslo, but they have not seen anything really from it. This magical state they've been hearing about since they were born is no more real today than it was a decade or two ago. So it basically, the PA has nothing to show for itself and any kind of victory for Hamas in Gaza, such as, let's say the release of prisoners even if it's not all of them, or even a symbolic victory, it's a huge blow to their two states project, which for most people living today, haven't really seen it produce anything tangible in the past two decades. It's just all talk to them. So I feel like while they outright can't say in public that they hope Hamas loses.

I imagine that this is the general sentiment there, and I feel like the people understand this and they sense this, and it's never been more obvious that the PA has become a subcontractor for the occupation in a way that is not even under the table anymore, that it used to be at least.

Yara Hawari 16:09

Fathi, what about discussions about the PA taking over Gaza?

I know that's something that the Americans are very keen on and have been in talks with the PA about this. And of course, as we're talking, the genocide is ongoing. We're not even in a post stage. This is still, you know, an active genocide. And rather remarkably, people are talking about the, the day after Even while the bombs are still falling on our kin in Gaza, but there are those discussions happening between the PA and various different actors.

What are your thoughts on that?

Fathi Nimer 16:55

As you said, I think all talk about the day after is not only premature. I think a lot of it is almost delusional because they're plotting for something that they don't even know how it's going to unfold. Like they are all so confident that they're going to dismantle Hamas and everything's going to be like, I don't know what they imagine is going to be like.

So the idea of the PA going in on the back of an Israeli tank would be absolutely terrible for everyone involved, including the PA itself, because that would be the last nail in its last shred of any kind of legitimacy ever had, even though some would argue it doesn't have any left. I mean, the PA has said as much, they said, we don't want to enter Gaza on the back of an Israeli tank, but it seems like they're being pushed towards that direction because realistically, who really is going to, from the eyes of the Americans and Israelis, I mean, who's going to take over Gaza after Hamas.

I mean, Israel says that it wants to occupy. Some people are suggesting international forces. I think it's all, again, delusional to be talking about this right now. But I think if it were not for the optics, I think the PA would jump at this opportunity to be able to retake Gaza. But I don't think they would be able to pull that off in the current situation.

Yara Hawari 18:01

And what about the response of the Palestinian street in the West Bank. Ordinary Palestinians, obviously Palestine is a very small community. We are connected on multiple different levels with our brothers and sisters in Gaza, family ties, friendship, colleagues. This has been an incredibly traumatic time for the Palestinian people as a whole.

But I think there have been questions as to the lack of mobilization in the West Bank. Perhaps, more specifically, in Ramallah, what are your thoughts on that?

Fathi Nimer 18:41

Well, there's an overwhelming feeling that nobody's doing anything enough and that everything pales really in front of what the Palestinians in Gaza are giving.

Like, this is not to discount the entirety of the West Bank, obviously, because it has given hundreds of martyrs and there are thousands of prisoners and almost 12,000 injured in the West Bank only since October. Like groups in refugee camps, for example, are bearing the brunt of the armed resistance.

I feel like people are really demobilized in the West Bank, at least in Ramallah, in a way that they are very worried actually about the repression from the Palestinian Authority. And it's really horrible that we've reached this place that even, for example, printing presses, they are not willing to print posters that have anything on them anymore about resistance or even boycotts.

I remember when we tried to get some boycott stickers done. They were like, no, we don't want to do that. We don't want to get into anything political. This is a Palestinian printing house. This is where people used to go and overwhelmingly print thousands upon thousands of martyr posters and things like that.

We have been completely almost domesticated. I think it's a combination of political repression and also the huge economic control that Israel has over us. And over the last few months, it's become so obvious that the economy of the West Bank is completely held hostage by the Israeli regime and that there is absolutely no way you can have a normal life unless you, in one way or another, kind of acquiesce to the status quo.

And this is something very dangerous that the Palestinians have been driven to over the 20 years of this state building project, where this was a very aimed for result. This is not something that just happened. And this is also not only witnessed in the West Bank. You can see this also in Jerusalem and in within 1948 territories, there's a huge kind of repression and atomization of Palestinians to kind of demobilize them.

Any word that you say could come back to haunt you and you will be out of a job, you'll be out of, even deported if you're in 1948 territories or Jerusalem. So this is some of situation that people in the West Bank, I mean, obviously what we're doing is not enough. People are trying to contribute from the little niche that they have, like journalists, for example, or lawyers trying to support the ICJ case as much as possible.

But this doesn't do anything compared to what's going on in Gaza. So it's a very difficult situation, and it's very sad that we've reached this point of demobilization.

Yara Hawari 21:10

Indeed, this is a tragic moment, but also I think a pivotal one for the Palestinian people. Fathi, thank you so much for sharing your insights with me on this episode of Rethinking Palestine.

Fathi Nimer 21:23

Thank you for having me.

Yara Hawari 21:25

Now, Al Shabaka has just published a roundtable on this very topic with contributions from Fathi and other members of the Policy Network. It's available on our website, al-shabaka.org. Thank you for listening to this episode of Rethinking Palestine.

Rethinking Palestine is brought to you by Al Shabaka, the Palestinian Policy Network. Al Shabaka is the only global independent Palestinian think tank whose mission is to produce critical policy analysis and collectively imagine a new policymaking paradigm for Palestine and Palestinians worldwide. For more information or to donate to support our work, visit al-shabaka.org and importantly, don't forget to subscribe to Rethinking Palestine, wherever you listen to podcasts.

Al-Shabaka: The Palestinian Policy Network, is an independent, non-profit organization. Al-Shabaka convenes a multidisciplinary, global network of Palestinian analysts to produce critical policy analysis and collectively imagine a new policymaking paradigm for Palestine and Palestinians worldwide.

Al-Shabaka materials may be circulated with due attribution to Al-Shabaka: The Palestinian Policy Network. The opinion of individual members of Al-Shabaka's policy network do not necessarily reflect the views of the organization as a whole.